Cyber security

For Equifax to say they decided not to do any notification out of fear of copycats would be like the skipper of the Titanic deciding not to sound the alarm because the ship might hit another iceberg.

Michael Farrell, co-director of Georgia Tech's Institute for Information Security & Privacy, quoted in Financial Times, October 2, 2017

[Equifax, the credit reporting company, noticed on July 9 that hackers stole personal information about 145.5 million Americans but delayed announcing the theft until September 7 because they wanted to prepare for possible further attacks, accoding to company executives]
