2016 Presidential election

Despite their hemming and hawing most Republican leaders closed ranks behind Trump, creating the image of a unified party.
That, in turn,
normalized the election.
Rather than a moment of crisis, the election became a standard two-party race, with Republicans backing the Republican candidate and Democrats backing the Democratic candidate.

Steven Levitsky and Daniel Ziblatt,
How Democracies Die