

2016 Presidential election

Most white working-class people voted for Donald Trump and the through line that you find is whiteness, not class and not gender.

It's not like he only got men; he got a majority of white women too.

So if you look at categories of white people you find Trump being dominant among them, in part because of the appeal he made, but also in part because the Republican Party has effectively become in this country the party of white people.
