

2020 Presidential election

At some point, people at the Justice Department, perhaps that prosecutor in Atlanta, are going to have to make a determination about whether or not they want to indict Donald Trump [for his role in the January 6, 2021 insurrection]. ...

Well, I think there's going to be sufficient factual information. And I think that there's going to be sufficient proof of intent. And then the question becomes, what's the impact of — of such an indictment? My initial thought was not to indict the the former president out of concern of what — how divisive it would be. But given what we have learned, I think that he probably has to be held accountable.

Eric Holder,
on "Face the Nation," May 8, 2022