

Bankers say

The analogy I use was that it was like lions hunting zebras. They would look for the weakest, the ones that would put up the least resistance.

Former Wells Fargo employee describing how bankers there created unauthorized or unnecessary accounts for customers.
Quoted by New York Times, October 21, 2016