

By the numbers

A study from Harvard University in January found that people with names usually perceived as being African-American such as "Tanisha" and "Tyrone" are 16 percent less likely to be accepted as guests on Airbnb than people with names like "Kristen" and "Brad." Another experiment found that black hosts charge 12 percent less than non-black ones.

New Scientist, July 30, 2016