

Citizenship

... citizenship is one of what W. B. Gallie has termed “essentially contested concepts.”

Many of the most studied concepts in the social sciences can be classified as “essentially contested” because there is no settled consensus on their specific meanings – their essence – and they do not lend themselves to easy definition.

Elizabeth F. Cohen and Cyril Ghosh,
Citizenship