

Criminal justice

In Kentucky, fully one quarter of the prisoners on death row had lawyers at trial who were later disbarred or resigned to avoid disbarment.

As one critic said, the Strickland [v. Washington] standard, in the real world, requires the state to provide little more than “a warm body with a law degree.”

Adam Cohen, Supreme Inequality