

Dead-in-the-heads say

The hardest decision I had to make was whether to erect fences and barricades around the Supreme Court. I had no choice but to go ahead and do it.

Chief Justice John Roberts, claiming that ordering fences to be erected around the Supreme Court building after its decision to overturn Roe v. Wade was leaked to the press by one of its members to prevent softening the decision provoked widespread public protest was a harder decision to make than making decisions about what to do about its leakers and members' other ethical lapses, death sentencing, civil or voting or gun rights, healthcare, affirmative action, student loans, gerrymandering, money in politics, etc.
