Death

Covid-19 has left the same proportion of the population dead — about 0.3% — as did World War II, and in less time.
...
One study, published in the scientific journal PLOS One last September estimates that roughly 7.4 million years of life were lost in the U.S. in 2020 alone, with 73% of them attributable directly to Covid-19.
...
There are fears these losses will be forgotten on a broad scale, beyond those directly affected.

Wall Street Journal, January 31, 2022