

Democracy

[T]he democratic process is unlikely to be preserved unless the people of a country preponderantly believe that it is desirable, and unless this belief comes to be embedded in the habits, practices and culture of that people.

Robert A. Dahl,
A Preface to Economic Democracy