

Democracy

... in the end all possible improvements of the infrastructure of democracy depend on one thing: that intermediary institutions be not only accessible and autonomous but also assessable, as the British philosopher Onora O'Neill has put it. If they are to contribute to citizens' judgments, it matters that citizens can also judge them.

Jan-Werner Müller, Democracy Rules

[Intermediary institutions include political parties and the press]