

Employment

Employers can already act on their prejudices to deny people a job.

But facial recognition [software] could make such bias routine, enabling firms to filter all job applications for ethnicity and signs of intelligence and sexuality.

The Economist, September 9, 2017