

Gun violence

All developed nations regulate firearms more stringently than we do; compared with the citizens of twenty-two other high-income countries, Americans are ten times more likely to be killed by guns.

In the past fifty years alone, more civilians have lost their lives to firearms within the United States than have been killed in uniform in all war in American history.

Adam Hochschild,
New York Review of Books, April 5, 2018