

Impeachment

Determination of right and wrong require evaluation of circumstance, motive and result.

Given that we live in a tribal political environment unable to agree on basic facts, we are unlikely to generate the widespread moral outrage necessary to prompt senators to risk eviction by voting against their constituents or against their party.

Jeffrey A. Engel,
in Impeachment: An American History