

Individualism

Take the dictum of J. S. Mill,
the classical individualist:

“Men are not, when brought together,
converted into another kind of substance.”

[the way hydrogen + oxygen = water]

Of course not. But the fallacy
is to suppose that they existed,
or had any kind of substance,
before being “brought together.”

Edward Hallett Carr, What Is History?