Interstate Crosscheck

The most common names in America belong to African Americans, Hispanic Americans, and Asian Americans. … Interstate Crosscheck, by matching only first and last names, is a brilliant way to eliminate voters of color. This "laughable" computer program is blocking the right to vote to more Black Americans, Asian- and Hispanic-Americans than the Ku Klux Klan could have dreamed of.

Greg Palast,
The Best Democracy Money Can Buy
[Interstate Crosscheck is a software package funded by Charles and David Koch and used by 30 states to identify nearly 7.2 million people with similar names who it deems "suspected double voters" that the states remove from their voter rolls without arresting or convicting the "suspects"]