

Myths in politics

The will of the people is a myth not because the general run of people are ignorant and short-sighted, but because people are diverse and there are different and often incompatible ways of combining their opinions.

“The people” is made up of a plurality of people, and there is no simple way of getting from the plural to the singular.

Albert Weale,
The Will of the People