

Offshoring

Some firms recognise that outsourcing production to cheaper locations has eroded innovation, says Ludovico Alcorta at UNIDO [United Nations Industrial Development Organization]. When production is moved elsewhere, opportunities to learn how to do it do it better are often lost.

The development of new products and processes can suffer, as can interactions with research organisations and universities.

Economist, January 14, 2017