

Partisanship

In 2016, for the first time in history, there was not a single split-ticket state — or a state that voted for a presidential candidate of one party, and a Senate candidate of the other.

In every state, voters chose a presidential candidate and a Senate candidate of the same party.

Adam Jentleson, Kill Switch