

Political inequality

[B]ecause the governing coalition will generally include representatives from minority parties, governing majorities are likely to be more inclusive than in a majoritarian system. Thus, a proportional system comes closer than a majoritarian system to providing equal representation—an[d] equal say—for all.

Robert A. Dahl,
How Democratic Is the American Constitution?