

Presidential immunity from criminal prosecution

It follows that an Act of Congress — either a specific one targeted at the President or a generally applicable one — may not criminalize the President's actions within his exclusive constitutional power. Neither may the courts adjudicate a criminal prosecution that examines such Presidential actions.

Trump v. United States