

Regulations

The statute, read as written, gives the Secretary broad authority to relieve a national emergency's effect on borrowers' ability to repay their student loans.

The Secretary did no more than use that lawfully delegated authority.

So the majority applies a rule specially crafted to kill significant regulatory action, by requiring Congress to delegate not just clearly but also microspecifically.

Elena Kagan, dissent in Biden v. Nebraska, et. al.