

Selfie

My company was not unacceptable to the young and careless, as well as to the studious and literary; and as I took a particular pleasure in the company of modest women, I had no reason to be displeased with the reception I met with them.

David Hume,
"My Own Life," April 18, 1776,
130 days before his death at age 65