The biggest thing, which readers may find hard to swallow given my entire career has been based on ridiculing others, is that, for my next act, I want to be useful.

Yes, I know sticking pins in pompous chief executives is useful in a meta kind of way but that's not the kind of useful I have in mind.

announcing she's retiring as a columnist for the Financial Times after 31 years to become a trigonometry teacher in an inner city school in London
