

Thinking

The team [that tested and confirmed the hypothesis that low-effort, automatic thinking promotes political conservatism] also found they could push people to the right by distracting them, putting them under time pressure or simply telling them not to think too hard. Participants who were asked to deliberate more deeply, in contrast, shifted their political thinking to the left.

New Scientist, December 16, 2017