

Trumpists say

I haven't given you all a history lesson in a while, and I wanted to give you a little history on homelessness.

[In] 1910, Hitler decided to live on the streets for a while.

So for two years, Hitler lived on the streets and practiced his oratory, and his body language, and how to connect with citizens and then went on to lead a life that got him in the history books.

It's not a dead end. They can come out of these homeless camps and have a a productive life — or in Hitler's case, a very unproductive life.

Frank Niceley,
Republican state senator in Tennessee,
supporting a bill to criminalize homeless
encampments on public property