

Voting

In reality, voter ID laws exist to prevent certain types of people from voting: women (whose names change regularly), the young (whose addresses change regularly), the elderly (who often don't have drivers' licenses), and the homeless (who don't have a fixed address). To be effective in swinging an election, a voter ID law ... just has to reduce voting in these categories in ways that systematically affect the total vote.

Salvatore Babones, Sixteen for '16