

Wealth inequality

Perhaps the best evidence of the power of an aristocracy is to be found in the degree of resentment it provokes. By that measure, the 9.9 percent are doing pretty well indeed.

The surest sign of an increase in resentment is a rise in political division and instability.

We're positively acing that test.

You can read all about it in the headlines of the past two years

Matthew Stewart, The Atlantic, June 2018