

the West

[I]n Europe and America, the prevailing view is that bipolarity is coming back.

A significant number of people expect a world dominated by two blocs led by the US and China. ...

Meanwhile, outside the West, citizens believe that fragmentation rather than polarisation will mark the next international order.

Most people in major non-Western countries such as China, India, Turkiye, and Russia predict the West will soon be just one global pole among several. The West may still be the strongest party but it will not be hegemonic.

Timothy Garton Ash, Ivan Krastev, Mark Leonard,
"United West, divided from the rest,"
European Council on Foreign Relations